Falling for Dallas (The Barbourville Series Book 2) By Carolynn Carey

Beth Ann Stanfield truly believes she's not a dream girl. She's a young widow with a son to raise, a huge medical debt to pay, and a monstrosity of a house that gobbles up all her extra cash. When sophisticated, educated, and wealthy Dallas Vance moves in across Redbud Road, Beth Ann knows their mutual attraction is headed down a dead end street.

Wanting to help Beth Ann, Dallas makes the mistake of trying to solve some of her financial problems and quickly discovers that the woman possesses an independent streak wider than the state of Tennessee. Fortunately, there's an old-fashioned cottage situated on Beth Ann's property, and Dallas convinces her that if she'll sell him the cottage he can renovate it and both of them will benefit.

But even when Beth Ann's financial worries are lessened, she understands that her love for Dallas is doomed unless she can find a way to even out the other disparities between them.

Editorial Review

From the Author

Falling for Dallas is the second in my series of sweet contemporary romances set in the small town of Barbourville, Tennessee. I enjoyed writing this book, which is based on two characters from A Summer Sentence, the first in the Barbourville series. Falling for Dallas is also the first book about triplet Vance brothers Dallas, Denver and Dayton. When Dallas first meets Beth Ann Stanfield in A Summer Sentence, they are very different in levels of sophistication, wealth, and life experiences, but that doesn't keep them from falling in love. The challenge then is to learn how to cope with those differences. Dallas's brothers also received their own books: Dealing with Denver and Dreaming of Dayton. And their stories were just the beginning of the Barbourville series, which continues to feature characters who live and love in the small mountain town.
