Editorial Review

Review

"This text appears to be very comprehensive especially in light of its metacognitive focus. I am very pleased to find several additions to the text, including active learning strategies, text marking, text annotating and text note-taking. These strategies are left out of many developmental reading texts but are essential to development of students' improved comprehension and on-going academic success. I do think that my students would be engaged considering that the readings for the "Applications" exercises in each chapter are very relevant and current in the students' generation."

"I want my students to be better readers. I want them to have a clearer understanding of reading comprehension skills and I want them to have had a great deal of practice when they finish with my course. In addition, I want them to be able to use these skills in their other college classes. Using this book, I think I could accomplish my goals."

About the Author

Christine Evans Carter is a Professor at St. Louis Community College at Meramec in the English department (since 1999) and has served as the Coordinator of their Reading Program for 5 years. Prior to her appointment in St. Louis, Christine was lead reading faculty in the transitional studies department at Denmark Technical College in South Carolina. She has also taught as an adjunct instructor at several institutions. Christine has a BA in English and an MA in Cultural Anthropology from the University of Connecticut (1984, 1988), and a MS in Reading from Western Illinois University (1994). In addition, she has acquired more than a PhD level of graduate credit in her field. Christine has been teaching for more than 20 years and has over 15 years of experience teaching all developmental and college level reading courses, ESL, advanced reading, all levels of developmental writing courses and introductory anthropology. She has made numerous presentations in her field at both national and regional conferences.
