The Edges of the Roman World By Marko A. Janković

The Edges of the Roman World is a volume consisting of seventeen papers dealing with different approaches to cultural changes that occurred in the context of Roman imperial politics. Papers are mainly focused on societies on the fringes, both social and geographical, and their response to Roman Imperialism. This volume is not a textbook, but rather a collection of different approaches which address the same problem of Roman Imperialism in local contexts. The volume is greatly inspired by the first Imperialism and Identities at the Edges of the Roman World conference, held at the Petnica Science Center in 2012.

Editorial Review

Review

"The authors are of different academic levels, from professors to postgraduate students, and discuss the material culture of select marginal communities and the social processes within these communities, comparing them with the social processes observed for the Roman state in general. This book thus offers a wide range of theoretical, archaeological and epigraphic studies of regions spanning from Asia Minor to Gaul and from northern Africa to Britain." -Anja Ragolic, Arheoloski Vestnik 66 (2015) "Far too little research has been undertaken on communities living at the extremities of the Roman Empire, and it is perhaps not surprising to see that many of the new generation of scholars who are moving in this direction are based in Universities which are, themselves, at the western extremities of what was once the Roman world. This is an important development - it is sometimes suggested that the critique of 'Romanization' which has dominated provincial archaeology for the last twenty years has been an insular (British) obsession, and that the conversation which my generation of archaeologists opened up with post-colonial theory and globalization studies is a conversation that is over. The Petnica conference - and the papers collected here - indicate that the opposite is true. This is not to say that these concepts were employed uncritically (because often they were not): but the most innovative papers, as will be clear from this volume, have creatively adapted current thinking to fit their own geographical and thematic concerns." -Jane Webster, Newcastle University
