Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Kicking off Cumberland's Seven Deadly Sins series is Speaking of Lust: Stories of Forbidden Desire, edited by Lawrence Sanders (Hit Man), with 19 racy and bone-chilling stories. Joyce Carol Oates imagines a conversation between a man accused of rape and his public defender. Sanders presents a novella in which four professionals in the off-hours share stories of lust gone awry. Ed Gorman and Clive Barker also contribute.

From Booklist

This first in a series of short-fiction collections based on the seven deadly sins brings together 18 titillating tales (including editor Sanders' title novella) that are outrageous, explicit, gory, and just plain fun. The first tale, "Crack," by James W. Hall, about one man's destructive obsession with a teenage neighbor, sets the tone for those that follow. Such well-known authors as James Crumley, Joyce Carol Oates, Joan Hess, and Clive Barker are among the contributors, and the wide range of styles brings a fascinating variety to a collection that, given the common theme, might otherwise have suffered from repetitiveness. In bringing together everyday men and women who encounter lust in extraordinary circumstances, the authors mix realism and mystery with eroticism in a beguiling manner that suggests soft-porn episodes of The Twilight Zone. All but the most sheltered readers will be waiting eagerly to sample the other six sins. Mary Frances Wilkens

From the Author

"I had as much fun writing 'Speaking of Lust' as I've had with anything in years, and if you enjoy it half as much as I did you'll be happy indeed. As I already know you'll be happy with all the other stories in the book. For my part, I look forward to the other six volumes. And right about now the one I'm most looking forward to is 'Sloth.'" --from the introduction
