"An intriguing, enticing, complex, and romantic novel that will keep readers up long into the night." ?Rundpinne

A secret may hold for a hundred years... and then it's time for the past to take revenge

Daphne Duvallon vowed never to return to the South years ago when she left her philandering fiance at the altar. Now family has called her back to Natchez, Mississippi, a city as mysterious and compelling as the ghostly voices that haunt her dreams.

From a time when the oldest settlement on the Mississippi was in its heyday and vast fortunes were made and lost, Daphne begins to uncover the secrets of an ancestor whose fate is somehow linked with her own. In a compelling and mesmerizing tale, now Daphne must right the wrongs of the past, or follow the same path into tragedy...

WHAT READERS ARE SAYING:

"A richly rewarding read brimming with local color, humor, sexual tension, environmental issues, and even a fun glimpse into the world of jazz bands."

"Ware's weaving of a contemporary story along with history of a hundred years past, and the accuracy and detail she brings into the story are fascinating."

Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Past demons threaten to resurface for Daphne Duvallon when her brother asks her to return to Natchez, Miss., to play the harp at his wedding. If Daphne agrees, she'll be fired from her position with the Oberlain Chamber Orchestra. Worse, she'll have to face her spiteful parents and confront the odious ex-fiancé, she left at the altar just two years before. Events quickly spiral from bad to bizarre when Daphne moves into her elderly cousin Maddy's crumbling mansion and suffers disturbing visions about her female ancestors, gifted harpists also named Daphne, whose bad choices in men resulted in insanity. When Daphne is in the present, which is most of the time, she is charmed by nature photographer Simon Hopkins. Simon cheers Daphne on as she launches a new career as a jazz harpist and, in return, she helps him organize a fund-raiser to fight Able Petroleum's attempts to build a toxic dump next to a bird sanctuary. Ware (Midnight on Julia Street, etc.) pads this tale with clumps of guidebook-style narrative and shallow, truly unpleasant characters. Although readers who enjoy time-travel romances may leach some pleasure from the pre-Civil War Southern plantation setting of Daphne's visions, others will be hard pressed to finish this lengthy book.

In this wonderful sequel to Midnight on Julia Street (1999), Daphne Duvallon leaves her native New Orleans for New York City after abandoning her philandering fiancé at the altar in front of 500 guests. Now her brother, King, wants her to come back south for his wedding in Natchez. A talented Julliard-trained harpist, Daphne will do anything for her brother, even if it means losing her job with an up-and-coming orchestra, and the trip truly becomes a life-altering experience when she meets Sim Hopkins, a nature photographer who has the potential to be the right man in her life if she can learn to trust again. Both are cautious, and for good reason, as the distant past impacts their future, cued by the music of a mysterious harp. This ghostly instrument opens a gateway to a sequence of tragic events beginning in the late 1790s and ending, finally, with the death of a previous Daphne Duvallon. A thoroughly engaging romance in its own right. Patty Engelmann
