Self-Publishing Textbooks and Instructional Materials By Franklin H. Silverman, Dan Poynter

A practical guide to successful--and respectable--self-publishing. For academic and scholarly writers, college instructors, and curriculum developers. By an experienced textbook author, college professor, and self-publisher. With a Foreword by Dan Poynter of ParaPublishing, the foremost authority on self-publishing and author of "The Self-Publishing Manual." And forewords by Ronald Pynn, Executive Director of the Text and Academic Authors Association and John Vivian, President of the Society of Academic Authors.

In this 208-page 6X9 paperback with index, Professor Silverman explains how, when, and why self-publishing is a respectable alternative in academe. He realistically analyzes the benefits and risks of self-publishing for academic authors and goes on to discuss print and electronic options and to explain precisely how to accomplish the various self-publishing tasks.

From the Publisher

This title was reviewed by Nisar Keshvani for Leonardo Online Digital Reviews. This review also appears in the August issue of the print journal Leonardo.

From the Author

Many college faculty tend to assume that if a textbook or instructional material for college students is well written and worthwhile, it should be possible to find a publisher for it. Furthermore, they tend to assume that if you have to publish it yourself, there must be something wrong with it and, consequently, the publication is not academically respectable. This book challenges such assumptions and shows how to self-publish respectably in both process and product.
